Are Looks The Only Thing He Has That Kill?

Last year alone, over 70,000 men and women died from AIDS. Today there are an estimated 2,000,000 who could be infected without even knowing it.

So the next time you see someone you think is drop dead gorgeous, just keep that in mind.

Federal Judge Blocks Law Restricting Adult Telephone Services

Helms Amendment Impairs Free Speech, Safer Sex

NEW YORK, NY—A federal judge in New York ordered the government not to enforce an unconstitutional law aimed at significantly restricting "adult" information telephone services, so-called "phonesex" and chat lines. Ruling in a lawsuit brought against the Department of Justice by adult information providers joined by Lambda Legal Defense and Education Fund and the New York Civil Liberties Union, the judge found that the law violated the First and Fifth Amendments and was "constitutionally vague."

U.S. District Court Judge Robert Patterson held that the federal law, which imposed a number of restrictions on adult service providers as well as telephone carriers, unduly burdened people's right to speak freely over the phones, and the right of the companies to provide the services without such restrictions as prepayment, credit cards, or presubscription. The law would have come into effect on August 15, and among other things would have required people seeking use of phone lines to "presubscribe" by first sending a note to the phone company asking to receive the services.

In a friend-of-the-court brief joined by the NYCLU, Lambda had urged the court to reject the law as unnecessarily oppressive, pointing out that customers already have the option of blocking unwanted services for free, simply by calling the local business office of the phone company. In a forty-eight page opinion, the court agreed that presubscription was not the "least restrictive means" available, and found that New York's present system of "voluntary blocking" sufficiently protects minors and others not wishing to receive the services.

Civil libertarians were quick to applaud the court's ruling, including its rejections of the law curbs on so-called "indecent speech" as unconstitutional vague. Lambda staff attorney Evan Wolfson, who worked on the case, said, "This law would make it a crime for adults to say on the telephone what they are free to say on the street. The judge's ruling says loud and clear that under the First Amendment, we, not the government, not the phone company, get to decide whom we talk to and about what." Wolfson also cited the importance of chat lines and adult telephone services to many gay men and lesbians as means of expression and association, and as tools in the fight for safer sex and AIDS education and prevention.

The decision in American Information Enterprises v. Thornburgh marked the second time a federal judge had acted to stop the law from taking effect. Previously, a court in California issued a similar ruling against the law, sponsored in Congress by Senator Jesse Helms. The U.S. Supreme Court struck down a similar law last year.

The information providers were represented by Joel Dichter of the New York firm of Seham, Klein and Zelman. The Village Voice Publishing Company also joined the friend-of-the-court on behalf of the information providers.

Dukakis Vetoes Anti-Gay Foster Care Law

BOSTON, MA—Gov. Michael Dukakis' veto of a budget amendment on the placement of foster children with homosexuals is being lauded by gay activists who opposed the measure.

The amendment to restrict the placement of children in the homes of gay couples was originally offered by House Minority Leader Steven Pierce, R-Westfield. Later, Sen. Lucile Hick offered a watered-down version in the Senate, which was included in the final budget.

The governor vetoed the foster care language when he signed a $13.4 billion budget for the fiscal year beginning July 1.

David LaFontaine, lobbying director for the Coalition for Lesbian and Gay Civil Rights, commended the governor for his veto.

In 1985, the Dukakis administration changed its foster care policy to restrict the placement of foster children with homosexuals. The administration has since rewritten the policy, making parenting experience the main criteria for placement.

"It is both ironic and gratifying that Dukakis, who authored this anti-gay policy, should now use his power to overrule the discriminatory language adopted by the Legislature," LaFontaine said.

Gay thirtysomething Will Not Rerun

ABC Pulls Controversial Episode From Summer Slate

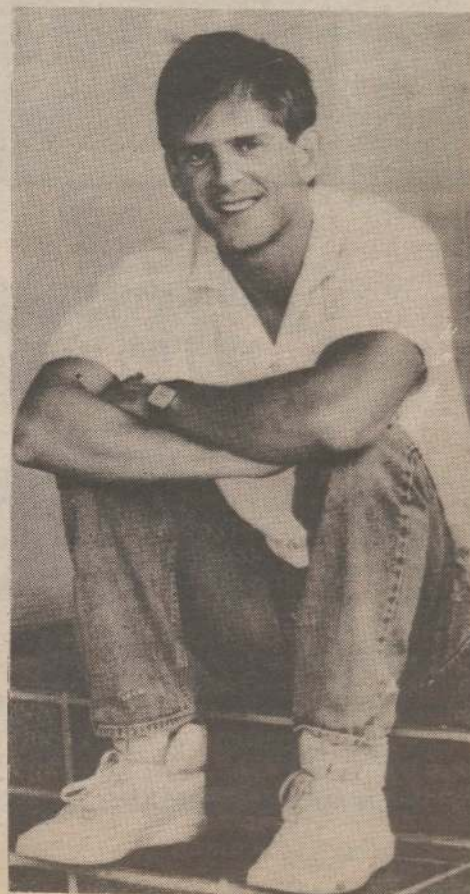

NEW YORK, NY—ABC-TV has decided to not rebroadcast the controversial thirtysomething episode which depicted a developing relationship between two gay characters, according to a spokesperson from the network.

The episode, which aired last November 7, roused the ire of fundamentalist groups who put pressure on program sponsors to drop their commercials from the show. ABC-TV has cited the initial loss of over a million dollars in revenue as the reason that the network has decided not to air this episode again, one of the few that will not be rebroadcast during summer reruns.

"We applaud ABC's courage in producing this thirtysomething episode and are disappointed with the network's lack of conviction in standing behind its own quality programming," says Stephen Miller of the Gay and Lesbian Alliance Against Defamation. "We had hoped that ABC would put principles above profit by not caving in to an organized censorship campaign aimed at preventing gay and lesbian characters from appearing on television."

In the episode, the sexuality of the gay character, Russell, is explored. In one scene, David Marshall Grant, the actor playing the role, is shown in bed talking with another gay man after what has evidently been an intimate encounter.

When the program initially aired, executive producer Marshall Herskovitz was quoted as saying that the role of television is "not to please everyone all the time. Human beings question the world we live in."

"Herskovitz displayed an enormous amount of sensitivity when he produced this episode, and it is disheartening to learn that millions of Americans will miss an opportunity to see gay characters portrayed on television as ordinary people," Miller adds.

Protesters Arrested at Bush Appearance

NEW YORK, NY—AIDS protesters demonstrated inside and outside of a Manhattan hotel where President Bush spoke to about 400 New York state Republicans at a $1,000-a-plate fundraiser late last month.

A police spokesman, Officer Scott Bloch, said a total of thirty-seven protesters were arrested in connection with the July 24 demonstrations, twenty-seven inside the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel and ten outside. The twenty-seven were charged with trespassing and resisting arrest, Bloch said, while eight of the protesters arrested outside the hotel were charged with disorderly conduct and two with assaulting an officer.

Nine of the protesters, members of ACT UP, staged a sit-in outside the ballroom of the hotel, apparently getting past security that included metal detectors and dozens of uniformed officers and secret service members. At about 7pm, the nine conservatively dressed protesters sat down inside an area open only to people with credentials and draped themselves with a banner that said, "Bush, stop bigotry, open borders to HIV+, gays and lesbians." They shouted, "Open the border to people with AIDS, Bush has the power" and other slogans before police escorted them away. Their chants were audible inside the ballroom, where the dinner had not yet begun.

Downstairs in the lobby, more ACT-UP members staged a "die-in," lying in groups on the floor with their hands cuffed and their clothes splattered with artificial blood. Outside, on Park Avenue, about five hundred protesters held a noisy demonstration targeting the administration's alleged lack of leadership on AIDS. "Read this: AIDS funding now," read one sign. At about 8:30 pm, some protesters hurled their signs and attempted to break police barricades but mounted police officers kept them in line. The demonstration ended shortly thereafter.

Groups Under Investigation Over Miller Boycott

Election Code Violations Could Carry Fines

DALLAS, TX—The Federal Election Commission is investigating several AIDS and gay advocacy groups, including three from Texas, for possible election code violations in their boycott of Miller brand beer and Marlboro cigarettes.

The Conservative Campaign Fund filed the complaint in Washington last week against five groups and two individuals because of their involvement in a boycott of Miller and Marlboro.

The boycott was initiated earlier this summer in response to contributions from Philip Morris to the re-election campaign of Sen. Jesse Helms, R-NC.

Philip Morris, which has donated funds to a museum named after Helms, manufactures Miller beer and Marlboro cigarettes. Helms frequently votes against gay rights and AIDS legislation.

The complaint targets the Dallas Gay Alliance, Dallas Tavern Guild, Tarrant County Gay Alliance and the San Francisco and Washington chapters of the AIDS Coalition to Unleash Power. Officials of the two ACT UP chapters were also named in the complaint filed by the PAC.

Peter T. Flaherty, chairman of the Conservative Campaign Fund, said he believes the groups are acting like PACs without having filed the papers to legally collect funds for a Senate race.

"There appears to be a major effort by militant homosexual groups around the country to illegally interfere in the North Carolina Senate race," Flaherty said.

"I don't object to them exercising their First Amendment rights, but when they try to go out and defeat Jesse Helms, then they are subject to federal laws."

GLAAD Advises NEA Commission: Nix Homophobia

NEW YORK, NY—The New York chapter of the Gay and Lesbian Alliance Against Defamation (GLAAD) is urging members of the President's Commission on the National Endowment for the Arts to "take a strong leadership role and stand firm against...expressions of homophobia."

The Commission was formed by President Bush to make suggestions on possible ways to restructure the process by which the NEA determines which artists should be awarded grants. The Commission is the President's response to recent attacks on the NEA by Senator Jesse Helms and other right-wing legislators who are particularly incensed by the NEA's support of artists who depict gay- and lesbian-themed work.

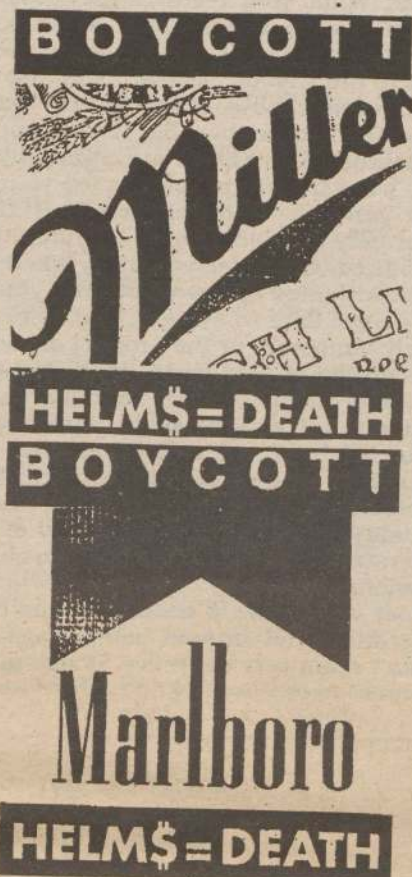

In letters written to the Commission, GLAAD also expressed "outrage at the equation of homoeroticism with obscenity in the current statute appropriating funds for the NEA." Finally, GLAAD expressed its belief in a "strong NEA whose autonomy should be preserved."

"The right-wing's assault on artistic freedom of expression should be of concern to all Americans," said Craig Davidson, GLAAD's Executive Director. "Gays and lesbians have been singled out so far, but we are only the first of many victims in a war that we all stand to lose."

Earlier this year, Congress prohibited the NEA from funding "homoeroticism." More recently, NEA's

The groups named in the complaint will seek legal advice before responding, said Bruce Monroe, president of the Dallas Gay Alliance.

"It is a very serious matter when someone tries to abridge your freedom of speech," Monroe said. "They are trying to divert our attention away from the boycott. It must be having an effect or they wouldn't be worried about it."

The FEC said violations of the code carry fines up to $10,000.

Lutheran Congregations Suspended

SAN FRANCISCO, CA—A fourteen-member disciplinary committee of the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America ordered two San Francisco congregations suspended for ordaining a lesbian couple and a gay man as pastors late last month.

The ELCA committee ordered St. Francis Lutheran Church and First United Lutheran Church suspended for a period of five years from the 5.3 million-member denomination.

The congregations will be expelled at the end of five years, the committee ordered, if the church has not changed its position on refusing to ordain sexually active gays and lesbians as clergy.

In announcing the decision, the committee called on the ELCA to undertake a thorough study of human sexuality and the issues involved in ordaining gays and lesbians who refuse to vow celibacy.

"They can't duck this any longer, they have to deal with it," according to the Rev. Ruth Frost, assistant pastor of St. Francis Lutheran Church.

Frost and Phyllis Zillhart, her lover, were ordained with Jeff Johnson, a gay man, as Lutheran clergy on January 20. The trio forms the pastoral team of the Lutheran Lesbian and Gay Ministry, an outreach to gays and lesbians in the San Francisco Bay area.

Their ordination violates the constitution of the 11,000-congregation ELCA, the fourth largest Protestant denomination in the United States.

Illinois Passes Hate Crimes Bill

SPRINGFIELD, IL—Illinois has joined the growing number of states which have hate crime laws which include sexual orientation. The state legislature there amended sexual orientation into the law in late June with passage of the Freedom From Violence Act. The action is important because it is the first time any state has amended sexual orientation into a hate crimes bill. While some states have included sexual orientation as part of an entire bill, this amendment requires a vote directly on a gay-related matter.

"For years we've been clubbed in Springfield any time sexual orientation issues are part of the debate," said Tim Drake, IGLTF legislative director. "To finally win has just overwhelmed us all."

Choosing Our Own Labels

Ellen M. Young

If you are gay or lesbian, you may face prejudice or even hatred at some point in your life. Some may even argue that you are capable of transforming yourself, that you can "become heterosexual." But there is one prejudice you are not likely to face. While your relatives may insist that you are not really gay, they will not suggest that homosexuality doesn't exist. They may not like it, but they will not deny that there are gay and lesbian people in this world.

If you are gay or lesbian, you also have a community with which to identify, should you choose to do so. The gay community may not fulfill all of your expectations or wishes, but it can supply that sense of belonging most of us seek.

But what if you had not community made up of people like yourself? Beyond that, what if most people denied your very existence—denied that your feelings were genuine—and insisted that they could explain your emotions more accurately than you could explain them yourself? You would probably feel patronized. Of course you know when you're attracted to a man. You know when you're attracted to a woman. And you know when you're attracted to both. How can people dare to suggest that some of your feelings are valid while others are merely temporary or the product of confusion?

According to Fred Klein, M.D., in his book The Bisexual Option, bisexuality is seen as a threat by both heterosexuals and homosexuals, and a "threat is best dealt with if it's dismissable. Somehow, God seems more secure in His Heaven if we are not burdened with the element of degree."

But why should bisexuality be considered a threat? Klein writes that "to most heterosexuals and homosexuals, the bisexual is an alien being whose dual sexuality opens up the possibility of their own sexual ambiguity. They cannot understand the bisexual's ability to share their own preferences but not their own aversions."

Most of us have a need to define ourselves in some way. And somehow, the suggestion that human beings possess a wide-ranging potential for affection doesn't seem very definitive. It's so much simpler to belong to something, and it seems so necessary to know where we don't belong. If we belong to an "us," there must always be a "them" somewhere.

Bisexuality does exist. It is attacked from both the heterosexual and homosexual communities on the assumption that bisexuals are really gay. Each side makes this assumption for different reasons.

Some gay people will say that bisexuals are going through a coming out "phase" which will end with the final realization that one has been gay all along. And what were those feelings for the opposite sex? Merely a self-deception. What is the reason for this presumptuous and somewhat arrogant attitude? Perhaps for some gay people, adding to the numbers—raising the percentage—makes their own orientation appear more validated, less questionable. After all, coming out can be an emotional ordeal for a confused young person without role models. Finally, this person finds a category, a label, to put on those feelings. Does the bisexuality of others somehow unsettle that sense of security? In addition, does it give the heterosexual more leverage in suggesting that gay people can be changed? I don't believe it does. Bisexuals do not "change" their attraction from one gender to another. They simply possess that capacity at all times. Gay people cannot forcibly become heterosexual because their attraction to the same gender cannot be destroyed. It is not that they are incapable of attraction to the opposite sex.

In other words, one can, in a sense, move further toward the center of the spectrum, but not to the other side.

Some heterosexuals will also maintain that bisexuality does not exist. They will claim, in some cases, that the person is really heterosexual, but going through a rebellious or confusing phase. In other cases, they will insist that bisexuals are gay because both groups are tainted with the same problem, illness, or sin. It is much the same as racism. A racist will say that an otherwise Caucasian person with one African American ancestor should be referred to simply as Black. The person in question may be proud of that ancestry, and may wish to be called Black or African American. But there is a difference between choosing a label proudly and having it thrust upon one hatefully.

Bisexuality and homosexuality are not the same thing. One label validates attraction to the opposite sex while the other does not. In 1981, pop singer Elton John recorded "Elton's Song," with lyrics by gay songwriter Tom Robinson. One line in the song reads, "They say it isn't real, but I know what I feel." We all know what we feel, and those feelings deserve to be respected. While I may believe that all people are potentially bisexual, I do not dispute the labels chosen by others for themselves. If one person's feelings could be placed at the gay end of the spectrum, and that person wishes to be referred to as gay, it is not my place to argue. I will call people what they wish to be called—it is they, after all, who own those feelings. It is for this reason that so-called lists of "famous gay people" are a misnomer. Such lists invariably include the names of well-known people, such as Elton John, who consider themselves bisexual. Why should a man's attraction to women, whether frequent or infrequent, be considered irrelevant or even invalid? Such an attitude is both condescending to him and insulting to his partner.

Bisexuality is not a naive stage one passes through on the way to something else. It is simply the recognition of one's potential ability to love the person first and the body second; it is the acknowledgement and the acceptance of feelings without imposing needless limitations. Bisexuality is neither promiscuity nor wild abandon. Like homosexuality, it is not behavior, but emotion; behavioral decisions are another matter. Finally, it is not confusion. It is only when we deny our true feeling that we become confused.

CRAMMING FOR THE BIG TEST

No studying. No grading on a curve.
No cheating. No shit.

Dyann Stone

The phone rings at 8:30 am. I am asleep. It is a wrong number; I go back to sleep.

The doorbell rings an hour later. I am asleep. It is Ray, there to take me to Terros to get an AIDS test.

Free, anonymous testing has been available for over eighteen months. Before that, I felt justified in putting it off because testing cost money and my name might be reported to the government. So, for the last year and a half I have been able to procrastinate and feel vindicated in my stalling. It's not that I'm worried that I may test positive; it's just...well, you know. I just didn't have the time or something.

Anyway, I'd finally decided to get tested, and Ray had agreed to take me. So, here we are—on our way. Yes, I'm fine. No, I'm not. Chances are, I tell myself, I'll test negative. Chances are, I'll be fine.

We arrive. Terros is very clean. Not like I expected. In the morning, they do drug rehab intakes. I harbor my own stereotypes regarding drug addicts: I expected to see unwashed, tattooed, pock-marked acid heads haunting the halls of this place. Worn shoes and beer bellies hanging out from motorcycle t-shirts. Boy, am I disappointed.

Ray and I are greeted by Sandra, a well-groomed young woman. She explains that the nurse is busy right now, and asks us to come back in thirty minutes.

We go to Dupkin' Donuts for a quick sugar fix which kills fifteen minutes. My breakfast: sugar and a coke. And I make fun of drug addicts.

We return to Terros, where I fill out a questionnaire with risk factors and transmission modes printed on it. I mark the modes which are applicable to me. I didn't know that douching is more dangerous than unprotected sex. Douching eliminates the natural bacteria in the body, the nurse explains. Oh. Makes sense to me.

The first questions are easy: County, age, sex, race, marital status. Then a trick question: Reason for visit. The choices are self, doctor referral, HIV+ partner, employment, other. I answer self.

Have I been tested previously? Are they kidding? Would I be this scared if I knew what was going to happen? The next question is Are you aware of the anonymous testing change? Of course, that's why I'm here!

Every black and blue mark I get, I'm sure it's kaposi sarcoma. Every sore throat is swollen lymph nodes. Every time that I wake up sweating, I'm sure it's "night sweats."

The next question: Are you pregnant? I hope not. I'm a lesbian. Have you had any sexually transmitted diseases? No, not that I'm aware of. Don't you have to have sex in order to get an STD? I guess I'm safe.

"Do you have any signs or symptoms of HIV infection?" the nurse asks. "Yes, every black and blue mark I get, I'm sure it's kaposi sarcoma. Every sore throat is swollen lymph nodes. Every time I wake up sweating after not having the air conditioner on at night, I'm certain it's 'night sweats.' No, no symptoms in real life."

"What is your risk category?" she wants to know. "Well, I had a blood transfusion in 1979," I tell her, knowing full well that if that blood was infected, I'd be dead by now: the virus would not have waited eleven years to show up in contaminated blood.

The next series of questions relates to my sexual activities; my "pick-ups." How many in the last six months and how many since 1977? The nurse tells me that the highest number of sexual partners she has been told of is 1,500. My answer to this question: Maybe three, but only if you count all my encounters.

Have I changed my sexual practices due to AIDS? You bet! I've stopped sleeping with bisexual men, straight men and women who have penises.

Uh-oh. Question Time is over. It's time for the nurse to draw blood. "Turn away," she suggests, "while I do this." Oh, sure, like that's going to make it hurt less. She gets the blood. I get a piece of cotton and a band-aid.

The nurse leaves the room. On her way out, she points to a bowl of prophylactics. "Help yourself to those." I take a handful and stuff them into my pocket. Who knows, maybe I'll get a chance to use them someday.

She comes back into the room. "Here's your card. It has a number on it. That's how we identify the blood. No name, just a number. Don't lose the card. Come back in two weeks for the results."

It's over. It's 10:30. I go back to the waiting room. Ray goes in. I wait. I glance through New Times. I read an article on the candidates currently running for governor. Now I'm wondering which is scarier: what I've just gone through, or the thought of one of those guys being governor of Arizona.

LIKE TO TALK ABOUT SEX!? WILLING TO SHARE YOUR THOUGHTS FOR RESEARCH?

A focus group session is being organized to collect information regarding sexual attitudes and practices in the male gay community.

WE ARE ASKING FOR YOUR HELP IN THIS PROJECT. Your participation can help shape future AIDS prevention efforts.

What's A Focus Group?

A focus group consists of a group of 8-12 people and a facilitator, who meet together for an hour or two to discuss a topic of interest—in this case, sex! The groups are informal, fun, and thought-provoking. Groups meet one time only. Participants remain anonymous, although sessions are taped. The tape is destroyed after a transcript is typed.

Why participate?

With the information gained, education and skill-building programs that meet the real needs of the gay community can be developed. We need to hear from you to know what these needs are. The information is also vital to bringing funding for education into the gay community.

If interested, please sign up for a group by calling Alice Stambaugh at 258-6381, X292.

Jane Chambers: JH Press, 1978. 157 pages. $6.95 paperbound

Leading Edge: An Anthology of Lesbian Sexual Fiction

Lady Winston, editor: Lace Publications, 1987. 206 pages. $9.95 paperbound

Here's a grab-bag of in-case-you-missed-it end of summer reading for, by and about lesbians. These books are excellent examples of the magnetic appeal of lesbian characters, and promise to absorb a few pleasant hours for interested readers.

"Amateur city" is slang used by detectives for situations when unqualified people attempt to help with investigations. Kate Delafield is the leader of the homicide investigation team, and her patience and skill overcome the obstacles presented by several people in her path. As she sorts out clues and motives, she follows her impulse to comfort the distraught woman who witnessed the first evidence of murder. Follow Kate Delafield's career further in the recent The Beverly Malibu.

It wasn't all that long ago when lesbians were burned as witches. Burning takes us back to that time as a modern wife and her young childcare assistant are possessed by the spirits of two women who couldn't complete their love in their own century. Through the possession, Angela recognizes her own love for women, and Cynthia affirms the bond of her marriage.

The Leading Edge is partly what its subtitle states—an anthology of lesbian sexual fiction. It includes also poetry, illustrations, science fiction, romantic fiction and some varieties of power play. The collection's strongest quality is its diversity—themes range from gentle allusion to brutal enforcement, descriptions from detail to terse, story lines from insufficient to excessive. Tastes vary...in case you hadn't noticed...and you'll find yourself entranced by some stories and less gratified by others.

Each of these books conveys its message that there's more diversity, strength, competence and pain among lesbians than meets the eye, but none of them does it at the expense of an easy and enjoyable read.

Cody

Keith Hale: Alyson, 1987. 189 pages. $6.95 paperbound

Wings of the Phoenix

Florine de Veer: Alyson, 1987. 175 pages. $6.95 paperbound

It's always the right time for some beach reading, so here are some pieces of fluff for gay men. With nuggets of gratifying philosophy and emotion, of course, just enough that you don't feel like you're wasting your intellect. Both of these stayed with me longer than I expected.

Sasha Alyson knows how to pick winners, and as always, Alyson books are securely bound, attractively designed and moderately priced. Cody and Wings of the Phoenix, both published about three years ago, have more in common than attractive young men—and by the way, neither story is a vehicle for sex. Both stories ease us into New Age psychic and spiritual phenomena because they're simply part of the character's lives—an easy way to get familiar with a trend that may be of no inherent interest to you.

Cody is a beautiful, mysterious, silent type who first comes to Trotsky's attention in their high school history class. Trotsky is gay and Cody is straight and they become best friends. It's the best kind of magical friendship that sometimes happens across orientation, with love and openness and willingness to engage. Trotsky (his mother is a socialist) is ready to absorb Cody's mystical view of their relationship and purpose, but doesn't let that interfere with the ongoing action. The action includes his affair with his younger brother's best friend and enough other startling developments to make this quite a page-turner.

Wings of the Phoenix begins pragmatically enough. Mark's on his way to a job interview, but he never gets there because he'd rather be seduced by Blaise. Blaise's home situation is repressive, to the extent that people are hired to keep an eye on him, and indispose anyone who appear to threaten his security. It turns out that Blaise is the Phoenix, a uniquely gifted psychic teacher, and incidentally the source of abundant income for his family. Amid implications and demonstration of violence, Mark and Blaise fall in love with each other and also with Kerry. They combine their individual strange family and financial situations into something equally strange, and we leave them preparing to live happily ever after.

RECLAIMING TRADITION

HOW CAN A PEOPLE AS OLD AS CIVILIZATION
BE SO BEREFT OF CUSTOMS TO PASS ALONG?

Lee Lynch

The time is finally ripe to end our hiding

Now and then many of us talk of reclaiming or naming as our own some of the traditions we've grown up with.

Our own. What traditions do we have to call our own? Green on Thursday, pinky rings, gay bars, closets? How can a people as old as civilization itself be so bereft of customs to pass on? Obviously because homosexuality has most often been about hiding, secrecy, silence, isolation. Tradition is nearly the opposite: the keeping alive of the heart of a people by passing on its customs, rites, practices.

We've said no, in this generation, to letting our world die along with us. Every generation that has to start from scratch, to reinvent itself, is weakened by spending its creative energy birthing when it could instead be growing, building on past structures. The time is finally ripe to end our hiding. Resourceful as gay people are, knowing that traditions must begin somewhere, we've turned our skill of lying for our lives into fanciful thinking. We've invented traditions in order to survive as a culture. Thus Gay Pride Day, and the incipient National Coming Out Day.

More and more groups, cities, gay businesses, are finding ways to recognize our worth, from the Lambda Literary Awards, to the Gay Olympics, to local Sweetheart Balls and summer picnics. I've been trying to come up with a few more customs some of us have begun individually, that might be healthy for a culture both now and as we pass them on.

Adoption may be one of those practices from which gays are often excluded, but only adoption of children. I neither want nor need a child. I do need an elder of my own. It's an exceptional grandma or grandpa, great-aunt or uncle, who will embrace the family queer. Those special relatives are treasures, but what I want is a queer grandma—and I'd take a queer grandpa too.

Perhaps a social service-oriented entrepreneur will set up a non-sexually oriented computer matching service: to pair older gays who want younger people in their lives (and I fully understand those who wouldn't) with those of us who want friends who've been there and seen it all. We middle-aged could have it both ways, adopting an elder as well as being adopted by the newly out. This concept really begins to feel like family.

We also need holidays to celebrate our national heroes. Considering how long it took to declare a Martin Luther King Day, we don't have a snowball's chance in hell with state and national legislatures. We'll just have to declare our own. I've read that a Harvey Milk Day has been proposed, and I'd certainly observe that, but must all our heroines and heroes be martyrs, or at the very least dead? How about a Great Gay Day, with rotating paragons from the arts, business world, activist politics, the sciences, social welfare, the trades. We need to name transvestite heroes, lesbian separatist heroines, radical faerie leaders.

What about a gay poet laureate? Musician-in-Residence at women's and men's music festivals? An annual traveling art show for the Artist of the Year? Gay Studies scholarships?

Some people would rather be mainstreamed, would rather receive their accolades from the so-called "straight" world. Who can blame them? This is where the honors have traditionally lain since the beginning of time. If we begin now, though, age has a way of bestowing venerableness upon an institution. By the time the fiftieth Gay chess Champion has been named, the first will have her/his portrait in a Gay Hall of Fame.

For those untempted by homo-prizes, or ambition, we need personal traditions to honor ourselves. Like Out-day. Not the big one, but another day for those who can't hack public displays. We all get birthdays. Some of us are lucky enough to celebrate recovery dates. Now we need a day to fete that special event: a getting-to-be-gay day. It is as important a date as a couple's anniversary.

And shares the same problem. What do we name as an anniversary date? The day we realized we were in love? The day we did it? And did one come out at the point of early pre-pubescent, same-gender sex-play? With the first of myriad childhood crushes? That would bring me out at about age four, hardly a moment of true awakening.

I actually measure my coming out from the first kiss. I don't even remember if I knew what to do next, but since being gay is primarily a sexual/cultural identification, I'd name that the day. Which makes me twenty-nine this year.

So how do I celebrate? I think I'll wait until my thirtieth Coming Out Day. Perhaps I'll go back to the corner of Kissena Boulevard and Geranium Avenue in Queens and look up at that first floor bedroom where it all began. Maybe to recognize our worth.*

*More and more we are finding ways

I'll give a party and invite all my friends—or do I just invite the gay ones? Perhaps there should be a special anniversary section in our presses complete with formal portraits.

Not to be flip, but given gay reality, certainly there ought to be a tradition, something like Mother's Day or Father's Day, for exes. A gesture to honor the past lovers in all our lives. Ex-Day advertising would rake in the bucks for every gay periodical. Gay merchants would promote mugs and ties with cute sayings like "Ex-lover, but Not Retired." Or "I Am My Ex-Lover's Favorite Ex-Lover." Tacky? Yes, but maybe it would lengthen our relationships. I mean, it's okay to have exes, but who wants to be one?

For all my frivolity, I do honor my people, and want to create, celebrate and pass on our ways. The very process gives more meaning and substance to my life, and may make gay more than a dirty word to people who have not yet come out.

Who's Been Messing With Ken?

Poor Barbie. Her dream date of some thirty years has apparently jumped the fence and is sampling the joys of cross-dressing.

Carina Guillot, a nurse from Tinton Falls, New Jersey, discovered a cross-dressed Ken while cruising the aisles of her neighborhood K-Mart. Guillot's reaction: "Oh my God! Not Ken!"

Sorry, Carina. Looks like Barbie's doll has gone switch-hitter. A spokesperson at Mattel tells us that Kinky Ken is the result of "product tampering." No matter. Guillot, a Barbie collector, is clinging tightly to her befrocked prince. "I've been offered three thousand dollars for him," she says. "So far, no other Kens like this one have shown up on the shelves."

Just you wait, Carina.

"The world is wild at heart and weird on top," moans Laura Dern in Wild at Heart, pretty much summing up the premise for David Lynch's latest surrealist comedy. Dern and Nicolas Cage appear as Sailor and Lula, who, after Sailor's release from prison, head for California to start a new life.

Alas, the yellow brick road isn't always so bright...Enter the Wicked Witch of the West: Lula's mother, played by Diane Ladd. Ladd is Laura Dern's mother and Bruce Dern's former spouse, for those of you who haven't been paying attention to your cinema trivia.

Ladd has the kids tracked by detectives and hit men, who include Harry Dean Stanton, Isabella Rossellini, Sherilyn Fenn, Willem Dafoe, and Laura Palmer (the dead chick in Twin Peaks) in a classic cameo.

Lynch ekes comedy out of the oddest objet: dismembered bodies, smeared lipstick, runs in silk stockings. Wild at Heart is a surreal Utopia made up of Lynch's cigarettes, sex and dancing, Elvis impersonations and voodoo torture scenes.

Horse Sense

According to the Lesbian & Gay Community Switchboard's Community Calendar, the Valley of the Sun is home to some forty-six homosexual clubs and organizations. These groups range from strictly women's to strictly men's organizations; from leather to church to AIDS to S&M groups. As of June, there is yet another organization formed: The Arizona Wranglers Association (AWA).

As the name implies, AWA is equestrian oriented. According to Dan C., president of AWA, the group promotes interest in horsemanship, knowledge of horsemanship and related activities. Like most Phoenix gay organizations, this one has a "home bar;" a drinking establishment which promotes and supports the group. AWA's home bar is the western-style Cash Inn on East McDowell.

In the few months since originating, AWA has established its temporary board of directors and has produced its first event—a hayride which took place on August 4th.

"I'm surprised but pleased that there are about as many women as men in our group so far," says chair Tommy.

According to Tommy, "AWA is an organization into which anyone can fit."

When we were filming in Santa Fe, I only saw him as a man for about one hour out of each day. After that, it was like he was my girlfriend. In fact, I almost forgot he was a man until he said, "Listen, honey, underneath this skirt beats a rod of steel."

To me, the drag queen is one of the main heroes (or heroines) of the gay world. The courage required for her merely to step out on the street in drag is perhaps a thousand times more than the courage that is required for any of the rest of us. She's almost a sacrificial figure, absorbing all the hatred that is leveled on us from other quarters.

Writer John Race

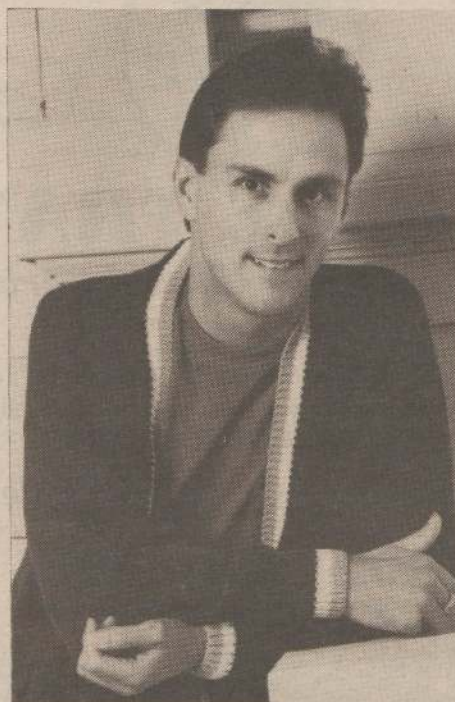

I have gotten millions of letters from drag queens. One I'll never forget wrote and said, "I hear you're making a movie about poor white trash that turns into rich white trash. I'll tell you what I'd do if I was rich white trash. I'd get myself three maids and just sit in a wheelchair, so I'd never have to walk, and take quaaludes the rest of my life."

Are Looks The Only Thing He Has That Kill?

Last year alone, over 70,000 men and women died from AIDS. Today there are an estimated 2,000,000 who could be infected without even knowing it.

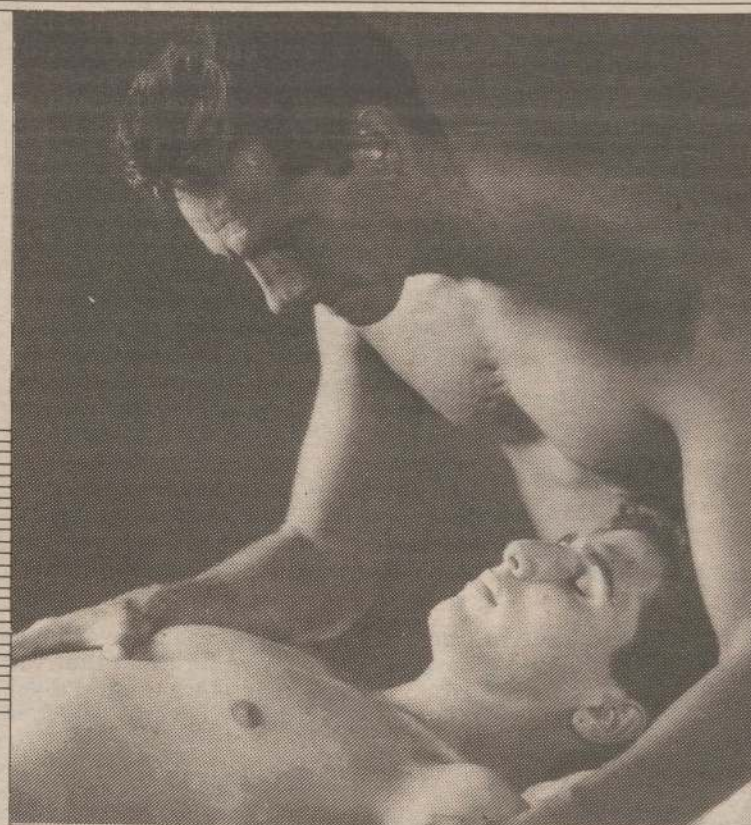

So the next time you see someone you think is drop dead gorgeous, just keep that in mind.

LEARN TO USE A CONDOM. AIDS DOESN'T GIVE YOU A SECOND CHANCE.

GAY NETWORK INTERNATIONAL

LETS YOU FIND WHAT OR WHO YOU'RE LOOKING FOR

A Totally New Concept in Gay Introductions. Here's How it Works...

GNI is a FREE service to those advertising in Phoenix Resource's personals section. GNI allows you to record a personal introduction for free, using your own voice, corresponding to the classified ad you have placed. Others then call your personal ad when they read it and leave a private voice message just for you. You can then listen to your messages in total privacy.

Placing An Ad...

...It's Absolutely Free!

Simply call 1-800-359-8610 to place your free introduction. You must have a touch-tone phone to place your ad and to listen to messages. To get your ad printed in the paper, simply follow the normal procedure to place a personals' classified.

To Respond to An Ad...

When you see a ☎ next to a personal ad in the paper, it means you can contact that person using the GNI system. Simply call our special "900" number: 1-900-860-0008. When the system answers, you'll have the option of listening to a variety of local or national introductions or simply the ad you're interested in responding to. If you wish to directly access the ads in Phoenix Resource, the access code is 14. You'll then have an opportunity to leave a private and personal message for the person you wish to reach. When the system answers, simply follow the instructions. Responding to ads is simple. Again, the number to call to respond to an ad is 1-900-860-0008.

How to Check Messages....

To see if anyone has responded to your introduction, call 1-900-860-0008, and enter your personal voice mailbox number. The instructions are explained when you call.

It's a great new way to find exactly what or who you may be looking for. It's simple and it's private. You'll never have to leave your own home telephone if you don't want to, so you don't need to worry about annoying nuisance calls. Why not give it a try today? You'll see why men and women across the country are calling GNI.

To get your personal introduction on the line, call...
